Browses and select a video from most popular options.

After this you might want to watch another video on the topic.

Don't worry, YouTube already has a similarly convincing video with the same viewpoints on the autoplay feature.

You can also look for another similarly convincing video with the same viewpoints in the UP NEXT section.

So, is it possible to find a video that offers a opposing view to the initial search?

Most likely, you wont.

Proceed to watch somewhat convincing video.

After a viewer watches:

"Political Correctness: How SJWs created Donald Trump".
A video that advocates against Political correctness.

It would be productive to the viewer if he is sensitized to view another video with opposing viewpoints to the initial video that was viewed.

Rather than maintaining him in a redundant cycle of shared views.

Wouldn't it be a good thing if after hearing a point of view, the counter argument is immediately accessible?
